

Our Haberman Story

When my daughter Evelyn was born myself and my husband were very keen that she have the best of everything and that included the best milk, so we naturally wanted to breastfeed. Evelyn took to it really well, from day one she was a real pro! I however was not having the same experience. For me, it was extremely painful, despite us doing everything right. It got to the point where I was dreading feeding her. So, we decided that we would split the feeding and I would try to express to give myself a break. This unfortunately didn't work for two reasons. The first was that I wasn't expressing enough. The second was that when giving Evelyn the expressed milk through a bottle, she would spill most of it. My milk then started to dry up so we made the big decision to move to formula. This was probably the hardest decision that we made, but our problems didn't stop there.

We were using bottles that claim to be the closest to natural breastfeeding (however after my experience I have noticed that most claim this) but Evelyn was still spilling a lot of milk. I tried all different flows of teat with the bottles but nothing worked. I tried changing to a different brand that is specifically for this problem, but this had no effect.

I was running out of options! I ran a search for babies that had problems with taking a bottle with excess dribbling/spillage and noticed that someone had tried Haberman bottles.

I watched a YouTube video on how they work and looked on the website to see what it was all about and this sounded like it was going to solve mine and Evelyn's problem. The very fact that it 'mimics' breast feeding was perfect for us as she fed very well on the breast.

I ordered one, just to see how we would get on and right from the first time she got it! Didn't spill a bit! No bib, no muslin!! She never had much wind but these, I would say, have also helped with this.

We had found the answer. I will never use a different bottle and have been able to recommend these to other mums, especially ones who are thinking about combination feeding.

I am over the moon! I can truly say, it is the best money that I have ever spent! I would also like to thank Haberman. Their communication with me and support is greatly appreciated. Customer service seems to be a novelty with a lot of organisations; with Haberman I believe they see customer service as a major priority!

Thank you!
